Chalcedonian No More: A Reformed Critique of the Barthian Christology of Bruce L. McCormack

Michael L. Aiken

In recent discussions, Karl Barth's Christology has been described as "Chalcedonian." These discussions are both challenging and stimulating to the church's understanding of Christology and afford an opportunity to sharpen its understanding of the Bible's teaching on Christ's person. This study will examine the interpretation of Barthian Christology in the proposal of Bruce L. McCormack. Specifically, it will focus on four areas as they relate to the person of Christ: (1) the ground of Christ's deity (theological ontology), (2) one person Christology, (3) two natures in Christ, and (4) divine immutability. [Chalcedonian No More has been adapted from Michael L. Aiken's Masters of Theology (Th.M.) at Westminster Theological Seminary in Philadelphia, PA.]
