"Yes," I muttered as I moved the rag down his muscles. "I have no one to help me."

My lip began to quiver, and could hardly keep my head up when he touched my chin and made me look into his eyes.

"You can always call me, Miss," he said. "I'm right here. For whatever you need."

He puffed out his chest. God how I wanted to lose myself in the fine lines of his muscles. My hand trembled around the beer bottle, and Andy steadied my grasp as he brought my hands so close to his lips. I let the bubbles swirled down his throat, and when he swallowed hard, I set the beer aside and turned my attention to the towel.

"You better not change your mind, Andy."

The rag felt tight in my hands as I eased it around his neck and lowered him to my lips. Andy moaned into my eyes, and I wanted his tongue twirling against mine when another groan of thunder sent me deeper into his arms.
