TRAVEL JOURNALS: SPECULATIONS ON CAMPING, CULTURE AND CHARACTER IN EUROPE. This book contains two travel journals. The first one is from a four month camping trip I took with my wife and a young daughter in 1964. I was a Fulbright scholar at the University of Milan that year. I had to leave our apartment early so we moved into an Agip camping place in Milan until I finished teaching. Then we spent two months camping in Italy and two months wandering around Spain, France, Holland, Germany, and Denmark. I offer opinions I held (at the time) about the character of people from different countries and compared them to people in the United States. I am an artist and made a number of drawings that I reproduce in the book. The second journal is about a three week visit my wife and I had in Sicily, almost 48 years to the day from when we left Milan to begin our four month stay. This part of the book is illustrated with photographs taken by my wife. In Sicily we rented apartments, for the most part, and so we got a different perspective on life there than tourists, who stay in hotels, get.
