What will you do to find true love if you even have any issues trusting over man?

On the day of her wedding, twenty-three year old Lucy Tucker gets the surprise of her life when her intended husband leaves town suddenly. With only a short note as an explanation for his actions, her heart is broken and she falls into a deep depression. It takes months for her to begin to realize that she longs to find true love, but she also worries that no man could ever love her—and that they will only hurt her the way Brian did.

While walking to work one day, she stumbles upon a bulletin ad for a mail order bride, sent from Nevada, and wonders whether she should answer the ad and make the trip West to start a new life. She desperately wants to be married, have children and find happiness, but doubts that any man will ever be able to make her feel secure in a relationship.

How could she possibly trust another man? How would she know if he was going to end up destroying her, the way Brian had?

And it would be even worse because she would already be married to him and would be living thousands of miles away from her family and friends.

Daniel Holbrook has watched two of his three brothers find love and lasting happiness over the last few years, each successfully placing mail order bride ads and finding truly beautiful wives. Although he has lived on his own for the last ten years, finding success as a furniture builder in their local area of Elko, Nevada, he realizes that his biggest dream is to find a good wife of his own. At the urging of his brothers, he makes the choice to take a risk and place an ad in a Virginia newspaper, hoping and praying for the kind of result his brothers found.

Several months pass with no letters, and Daniel decides to trust the Lord and patiently wait for a bride instead of taking matters into his own hands. When he finally receives a letter from a young lady back East, he brings her to his home and hopes for the best. His biggest prayer is that she is something like his sisters-in-law, who he loves dearly like his own blood family.

How will Lucy get over her heartbreak—or will she let it consume her and rob her of her chance at love?

Can Daniel win the heart of the woman who has been shattered or is he going to be a bachelor his entire life?

This is a standalone story specially presented by Rosie Attwood.
