The Wall Of Mirrors Isaac Baroi

This is a book which describes the greatest spiritual personalities of our time, such as Mother Teresa, Frere Roger of Taize, Pope John Paul II and so on. This book also explores the writer's relationship with other religions and their leaders. It is a book of logical and the reality of mysticism. This is a book about all world religions and is interconnected with Christianity. The writer faced directly the incidences of 9/11 in New York which changed his life and the concept of science, religion, politics, and new birth. It is a searching of every individual's spirituality and surely you will find God by reading this book. It is a new concept of spirituality written by a man from the East. To be born again you do not need any guru or any masters. This book renounces any form of guruism which damages the face of God in human beings and at present the Western world. This is a book which will help you to live in peace, understand God through your own sacred journey in this world.

In this book, you will read a first-person view of spirituality, religion, politics, and hunger on a world-wide level as seen through the eyes of Isaac Baroi, who has searched the world, but especially the Eastern part of the world, for the reality of God. He has also searched the world for an answer to the problem of people in different religions and in the same religions killing each other. He presents this information in an autobiographical style telling us stories about the incredible people he has known and from whom he has learned. Eventually you will see that this book is written not only for Christians, but also for Muslims, Hindus, Buddhists, Confucians, Amedia, Bahai, Sufi, Islamia, Tribal (or aboriginals), Jews, Sikh and the still few hundreds of other religions and rituals. It is also for those who practice no religion or spirituality. The book has been written about the practical reality of world spiritualities which are well known and well unknown. This is a book for all people who search for the faces of God through love and a broken heart with respect for all faiths and traditions. It is a universal door to open in order to know our Creator, the unified One, Father or Mother of all. Yet this book witnesses that if there are many Gods there is no God.

During his years of living in the United States (a sixth culture for him), he has seen the hunger of our people for peace and transcendence. He has also noticed how a nation long considered Christian is turning to other religions for that peace and transcendence or dropping out of religion altogether. And he has noticed the consumerism abundant in all religions; yet, when he walks into a bookstore, the sections called "Spirituality" contain no books written by Christians or about Christianity. These are sources of great concern for him. He is concerned because those "other" religions and spiritualities are from his homeland and he knows them well. His primary goal for this book is to tell you what these religions truly are and what they are not. While Americans flock to these religions looking for peace, love, tranquility, and transcendence, Isaac Baroi knows from experience that ancient world religions have come to know these heavenly states only since their leaders have been introduced to Christianity. They have borrowed words that would sound familiar to you from Christianity without letting the world know that they are borrowed. Mr. Baroi believes that the U.S.A. could be the mother of all religion, not because she is perfect and not because she is a super-power. It is because of her gentle, caring touch of freedom and her strong sense of justice for even the weakest ones. He believes that if the people of the U.S.A. can be brave enough to understand the goodness of humility, they will discover or re-discover their history and the spiritual values of their past because Americans have paid the cost of their faith much more than any nation on Earth. It is worthy to live honestly, to live
